A NEW FAIR GROUNDS

Is What the State Fair Association will Have

WHEN IMPROVEMENTS ARE DONE

Which are now in Progress-The Finest Half-Mile Track in the Country-Everything Being Changed and the Public will not Recognize the Place when it is Finished-Some-of the new Ideas.

When the spring race meeting opens on the West Virginia State Fair grounds the public will not recognize the place. Improvements which have been in progress since last October will make of the grounds almost an entirely new place. The only thing recognizable about it now is the main building and machinery hall. The grounds have been enlarged, the cattle, sheep, swine and poultry exhibits relocated in new pens, the track moved and enlarged, a new monster grand stand built and nearly every familiar feature in the enclosure has given way to improved closure has given way to improved arrangements and facilities. The cost of ground added to the enclosure and of making the improvements now in progress, will exceed $50,000. Those who are familiar with the old grounds will not be at all prepared for the grand change that has been made. The race course naturally comes in for the first admiring comment. It has been moved toward the west, so that where the quarter stretch formerly was is now far within the inner fence about the track. The new quarter stretch runs partially over the road which used to run between the grand stand and the tence.

which used to run between the grand stand and the tence.

This change widens the space between the east fence and the track to such an extent that besides a much wider road there, a space forty feet wide is left, and those who do not care to pay for the privilege of driving inside the track can line up along the back stretch.

Traces have been planted twenty feet. Trees have been planted twenty feet apart in this space, and it will be an at-

On the quarter stretch the track is now eighty feet wide, as against forty, feet before, and on the back stretch it is fifty. The old track was thirty-eight. The curves are gentle and gradual, almost "transition" style. The outer side of the track is seven feet higher than the old one, and a more beautiful half mile track does not exist anywhere. There are no trees within it, and nothing else to obstruct the view, and from any, point on it the entire circle is plainly in view.

The only structures left inside the course are the band stand and the timers' box. Beside the latter is a commodious box for the rubbers, weighers and score card men.

The judges' stand has been moved across the track to the same side as the grand stand. The open space in frost

The new grand stand is an improvement only second in importance to the new track. It is substantially built of structural steel, and is a graceful affair.

The new grand stand is an improvement only second in importance to the new track. It is substantially built of structural steel, and is a graceful affair, reflecting much credit on its designer, Mr. Gilmore Brown. The stand is 320 feet. long by 48 wide. It has fifteen tiers of seats the full length, and will seat 4,000 people. In the middle will be 500 roomy opera chairs for reserved seots. Back of all the seats is a six-foot walk. At the rear it is thirty-eight feet high, and a view from that point of the river and the Ohio hills is something worth paying to see. From every seat in the stand the entire race course is in plain view. The entrance is by two stairways of very gradual ascent, one at each end of the rear. The seats are seven inches wider than the old ones, and in every way it is more convenient, commodious and comfortable.

The bar arrangements have been revolutionized. The central 120 feet under the grand stand is devoted to bars facing both toward the track and the road outside. North of this is a large room for tables and chairs, to be used by those who desire to sit down and drink bottled beer or wine. The bar arrangements are as complete as in any saloon, and there is ample room to prevent possible annoyance to people outside. South of the bar is a storage room for beer, and south of this the entire space is devoted to the pool sellers. There will be no pool boxes or book makers outside. The space where they formerly stood has been planted in grass and many, trees set out.

iy stood has been planted in grass and many trees set out.

West of the lower end of the grand stand, and clear south to the stables, piles were driven and earth filled in forty feet outside of the former river bank. This makes a wide drive and room for needed structures. This gives a wide, safe roadway all account the a wide, safe roadway all around the

One of the drawbacks of the former arrangement was the location of the sheep, swine and cattle pens along the north side between the Frontstreet and Ienn street gates. These have all been taken away, and a fine, broad promenade occupies their place. The pens and the poultry coops will occupy the new ground north of the old pens west of Fenn street. There will be three rows of coops, 200 feet long, and row after row of cattle, sheep and swine pens of the same length. This ground was leveled off at great cost. The filling of the track, by the way, required 15,000 cubic yards of earth, and that alone cost nearly $2,000. One of the drawbacks of the former nearly $2,000.

South of the new pens is a large circle, surrounded by trees, and in the centre a stand for the cattle judges. The stock will be exhibited in this ring.

About 120 trees of good size have been planted in such a way as to form been planted in such a way as to form avenues for pedestrians and vehicles. They are all growing nicely. They reach from the lower end of the grand stand to the gates and the effect is beautiful. There is still room for swings, morry-zo-rounds, sideshows and all sorts of "fakira." In making the changes several of the permanent booths had to be moved from the orchard into new locations. About fifty apple trees were be moved from the orchard into now locations. About fifty apple trees were dug up and thrown away. One decided improvement will be the large increase in the number of benches about the grounds. There has been a demand for resting places on crowded days. Between each alternate pair of trees along both sides of all the new avenues scats will be placed, with room to accommodate thousands of people in all.

Among the big items of work done was the building of about two miles of naw fence. Every post is securely anchored so as to avert danger from floods, as are all the steel unrights of the grand stand, and that structure can neither blow down, burn up nor wash away. The northern end of the stand is fifty foet north of the old one.

away. The northern end of the stand is fifty feet north of the old one. Water pipes have been laid all over the ground, and there will be several new drinking places "for man and beast."

by the middle of next week. The prac-tically new grounds are worthy of a trip to the Island just to see the im-provements. The new track is already popular with horsemen.

Last evening at Bethany college an oratorical contest was held for the purpose of selecting one to represent the college at the meeting and contest of the Oratorical Society, of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, which takes place at Meadville, Pa., on June 1. At last night's contest the six orators selected by the students delivered their orations in the presence of the three judges; S. S. Davis, of the young ladies' seminary of Steubenville; J. E. Diehl, principal of the West Liberty normal school, and Rev. J. H. Littell, of Wheeling. Three of the orations were of the very highest grade and the / judges found it difficult to decide. Finally the first prize was awarded to W. D. Turner, of West Virginia, whose subject, "A Noble Life," was handled in a wery able manner. Second prize went to I. W. Kimmel, of Pennsylvania, "Advantages of Universal Peace," and the third prize to J. R. McWane, of Virginia, "Out of Manacles into Manhood." At last night's contest the six orators
